Ruminations

It was a beautiful white Christmas. On the radio they were mentioning the probability of having a white Christmas which has substantially decline since my youth, so to have the grounds and the trees and the urns laced with fluffy snow was wonderful. All the salting that gets tracked into the building, and the salt stains under the pews, and the little kernels of undissolved salt that find their way into every crevice and nook – not so much. It was kind of apropos that following Christmas the temperatures increased and the mornings were filled with fog. It kind of matched how my head was reacting. One day I nodded off and when I startled back from dreamland, I just couldn't orient myself to time, date or place. Anyway, that is a common complaint, that this particular holiday, Christmas season has a very disorienting effect on many people. The yearly displacement of Christmas day is such a source of confusion when Wednesdays feel like Sundays and Fridays seem like Mondays. You just catch your stride and then it is New Year's Day, and the fog and confusion start all over. And it doesn't help that our bulletin deadline shifts as well. Nothing like waking up on a Monday morning and being reminded that the bulletin is due before 1:00 pm. My Ruminations brain doesn't kick in until Tuesdays. Yes it is wonderful to have these holidays, but as I'm surviving more and more of them, the longer the recovery period is. Anyway, thank you for all the wonderful gifts and cards. I am not so sure I am thankful for the delicious foods that came my way. I am about an hour before my weekly weigh in, and I know it is not going to be good. I'm blaming it on the tourtières, Christmas cake, and Spinach Quiche. Shame on you for tempting me like that – (same time next year?). Over the last years, I was very fortunate that my mom was always able to get the exact Christmas gift I wanted. And this year was no exception. I know she passed away, and I am sure my brothers didn't receive anything from her, and it's not because I had control of her bank account. It all stems back a few years. Mom was not really attune to my likes and dislikes. I think they stopped trying to buy me clothes going all the way back to high school. For my birthday one year, I received these pants and jacket that were three tones of blue with bell bottom pants. I would never be caught dead in them. So clothes were off the table, thanks be to God. Even music, I wanted Elton John, and mom would get John Denver (she never had a head for details). So it got to the point where she suggested I pick something up which would be from her, and she would pay me for it (that never happened and neither should it have every happened.) So since I was the source, I started picking up my gifts during the Boxing Day Sales so I could "save mom some money". So I have every intention of going out into the sales and getting my annual Christmas present from mom, and I know it will be just what I want. Thanks Mom – Merry Christmas.
